The Death of Art and the Birth of Pop; Art's long slide into irrelevance

When Da Vinci unveiled his Mona Lisa the world changed- civilisation took another significant step forward. Now Mona Lisa is just another image decorating things from T-shirts to chocolate wrappers, and art – art with a capital "A" – has become something of an irrelevance as modern society marched onward. How did this come about?

Art used to be one of the most progressive forces in society. When people think of the Renaissance they are likely to think of the great painters of the age (the sixteenth century painters of the High Renaissance: Michelangelo, Da Vinci and Raphael, and the fifteenth century painters that had paved the way for them, such as Masaccio, Fra Angelico and Botticelli). There is a good reason for this association. Those works of art gave the age a new image of nature, of the sensuous world, and the power of art. Society remained predominantly Catholic, but within Catholicism artists gave a completely new significance to this world – to the here and now.

Medieval art – simple, unambitious, flat and out of proportion – conveyed the essential poverty the sensuous world had for the Catholic. Renaissance art rediscovered perspective and pictorial beauty, and the new realism gave a shockingly positive portrayal of natural forms, giving new meaning to the world of the senses and helping to consolidate a new sense of cultural self-confidence. Society was on the move and art was there at the helm helping to chart the course.

In contrast to this, anyone who tries to put their finger on the essence of the modern world is unlikely to point to art. People are much more likely to characterise the modern world in terms of science and technology. "Nature" for us is first and foremost the world as it is understood by science. There are other ideas and other images of nature but none is as powerful as that of science. Science has been at the helm for a long time now and art has been slipping gradually towards powerlessness.

Another reason for the diminished status of art was the shift from an aristocratic society to a more democratic one. At the end of the eighteenth century the art that mattered was that commissioned by kings, princes, and lords and it adorned courts, palaces, mansions and cathedrals. In the nineteenth century, the industrial revolution gathered pace and greater political power was given to those who were getting rich from the new economic developments, the market for art changed. Artists became more independent, producing works exhibited in galleries and then collected by the wealthy individuals who were often attracted by art that seemed fresh and individual and challenging. This is the period that gave rise to Impressionism (with Monet, Renoir and Gaugin as some of its leading lights) – the movement that is still probably the most popular in the history of painting.

When cinema and television developed in the twentieth century a new cultural space opened up which completely re-defined what mattered and what didn't. To really have an impact, an image had to appear in the mass media. Mass media is big business. Newspapers have to be sold, cinemas have to be filled and TV ratings have to be as high as possible to attract advertising revenue.

The fate of art was then sealed. It had two choices. Either it reconciled itself to the culture industry and produced neat, easily digestible works which would be popular and would sell easily. This would mean giving up its hope of having an impact on people's perceptions because nothing within the culture industry could essentially challenge the power of that industry and the prevailing perception that whatever happens now it will be business as usual tomorrow.

The other choice for the artist has been to try to remain true to a tradition of High Art and to keep a distance from the culture industry by producing works which are too difficult to be neatly packaged and sold to the masses. In today's world something has to reach a mass audience if it is really to change anything.

Art with a capital "A" is on the horns of a dilemma: either it has something significant to say but no one to speak to, or it has an audience but nothing of any significance to say.

B. Read the following article to answer Questions 13 - 15.

The Healthful eating plate

Numerous studies show that to avoid or better manage disease, your plate should focus on unrefined or minimally processed plant foods.

What's on the plate?

Vegetables or salads should fill half of your plate and showcase various colours. They supply fibre and phytonutrients which fight disease and prevents excess weight.

You don't have to go carb free! Whole grains can occupy a quarter of the plate. Unlike refined carbs, which can bring on type 2 diabetes and colon cancer, low glycaemic – index (GI) whole grains help regulate your blood glucose and insulin levels, lower bad cholesterol and assist with weight management.

Plant proteins need to take up another quarter of the plate, so you needn't worry about missing out on protein and minerals found in meat. Think legumes, nuts, seeds and convenience products made from these.

Thoughts

Softly, softly falls the dew Let it fall, let it fall; Softly, softly calls a voice Let it call, let it call. A violet mist will clothe the hills And lavender the sky Flowers open fragrant frills And still a tear I cry. Slowly, slowly flow the tears Let them flow, let them flow; Slowly, slowly fades the love Let it go, let it go.

By Jean Woo.

Who Am I?

Under the wings of history's two great enemies I was betrayed into the den of Protocols of 1914, My beautiful land was alienated through fraud. I am ignorant of the Western shrewd culture, My future is uncertain, Pandemonium is the right word For my so-called government, I long for a day of improvement, I travel abroad with an identity card For I am stateless and have no right Of appeal in my country's high court. Who am I, lost in this ocean of confusion? My 'tea tare' takes very little notice of my cry. At least I am still able to swim But I wouldn't like to be washed ashore On the desert of a French Pacific Republic. Who am I? I am the third citizen of my country The only condominium in the world.

By Donald Kalpokas.

So let's go now: Let's go for their universities Let's go for their offices Let's go for their guns. Irian Jaya! New Caledonia!

Let's go for their towers Let's go for their palaces Let's go for their thrones

Hawaii! Tahiti! American Samoa!

Let's go for their strongholds Let's go for their fortresses Let's go for their gates Polynesia! Micronesia! Melanesia!

Let's go for their guns Let's go for their offices And ask why they are here.
